(Carpene and Mensola, Diabetologia 35, 649-657, 1991). Sensory symptoms of distal S.P.N. include predominantly paresthesias of the distal extremities and less commonly pain as well. Examination of distal S.P.N. is difficult but the most common symptom is a great trophic destruction (atrophy, clubbed fingers, ulcers, etc.). Autonomic neuropathy can manifest either by dysautonomia (hypersensitivity and/or weakness of the cardiovascular, gastric, thyroid, urinary and sexual organs) or by orthostatic hypotension. The cause of the peripheral neuropathy in DM is believed to be a combination of microvascular insufficiency, direct effects of elevated blood glucose, and the binding of advanced glycation end products (AGEs) to the neural cells in the peripheral nervous system (Vlassara and Blum, 1994. Biochem. Biophys. Res. Commun. 198: 449-453; Brownlee, 1991. Cell 75: 175-185; Atala and Brownlee, 1995. Mol. Brain Res. 37: 369-380). In the peripheral nervous system, AGEs bind to small nerve fibres with cross-linking effects and polyol accumulation. Because of the increased binding of AGEs to the neural cell, the small nerves are destroyed slowly over months. In addition, AGEs also bind to the basement membrane of the blood vessels with crosslinking effects, thus inhibiting the microvascular function and also causing direct effects on the endothelial
